First Telegraph Line. Fifty year ago there was one solitary telegraph line of any successful system in existence; and that was exciting the curiosity and wonder of all passengers on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad between the nation's capital and Mary land's chief city. The interest in the new means of transmitting intelligencewas so great that Professor Morse sav no impropriety in asking the managers of the radroad, along which ran his high wire, to direct that whenever a break occurred in the line the next pasing train should wait at the point until the passengers and trainmen stould have repaired the damage; and it is said that he was quite chagrined at their refusal. They might have advantageously undertaken this slight task for a certain use of the line in the busines on the road.
